

VALUED CUSTOMER

Our venue is housed in the historic Franschhoek Train Station, designed by Sir Herbert Baker and built in 1915.

The building is now a South African Cultural Heritage Site, which means no structural changes may be made.

Our kitchen operates from the original parcel office and, while fully equipped, its size can limit capacity during busy periods—especially on weekends and in season. If your meal takes slightly longer at times, we truly appreciate your patience and understanding.

We hope you enjoy your time with us at this unique, nostalgic landmark on the railway tracks.

STATION MANAGEMENT.

HISTORY

The railway line from Paarl to Franschhoek opened in 1904, originally served by a simple corrugated iron station. Its arrival transformed local farming, allowing produce and supplies—including manure for orchards—to be transported more efficiently. In 1911, the first mail arrived by rail, connecting Franschhoek to the world.

The current station building was completed in 1915, designed by Sir Herbert Baker. For decades, two trains ran daily, but as road travel grew, passenger services declined. The last steam train passed through in 1976, later replaced by diesel, and eventually the line was discontinued in the late 1900s.

In 2009, the station was restored and reopened as The Franschhoek Station Pub & Grill, preserving its heritage for future generations.
